About the Institute

Judging by the date of establishing year, GCET is relatively a new arrival in the arena of technical Institutions. It was established in 2007, as an autonomous body of Govt. of Rajasthan, amidst the brown bloom of desert island, Bikaner. It has made its marks by inspiring quality education. Total intake of college is 420 students in branches (EE, ECE, CSE, ME, CE, CRE) of Engineering and 60 students in MBA per year. To create Techno- Managers for meeting current and future demands of industry with emphasis of leadership, social sensitivity and eyes to grasp opportunity at global perspective

About Bikaner

Prior to the mid 15th century, the region that is now Bikaner was a barren wilderness called jagldehsh. In 1488 Rao Bika established the city of Bikaner. According to James Tod, the spot which Bika selected for his capital was the birthright of a Nehra Jat, who would only concede it for this purpose on the condition that his name should be linked in perpetuity with its surrender. Naira, or Nera, was the name of the proprietor, which Bika added to his own, thus composing that of the future capital, Bikaner.

Rao Bika was the first son of Maharaj rao jodha.Rao Jodha of the Rathor clan, the founder of Jodhpur and conquered the largely arid country in the north of Rajasthan.As the first son of Jodha

He wanted to have his own kindom not inheriting Jodhpur from his father or the title of Maharaja. He therefore decided to build his own kingdom in what is now the state of Bikaner in the area of Jungladesh. Though it was in the Thar Desert, Bikaner was considered an oasis on the trade route between Central Asia and the Gujrat coast as it had adequate spring water. Bika's name was attached to the city he built and to the state of Bikaner ("the settlement of Bika") that he established. Bika built a fort in 1478, which is now in ruins, and a hundred years later a new fort was built about 1.5 km from the city centre, known as the Junagarh Fort.
